This invention relates to dentifrice compositions containing a combination of a water soluble fluoride and a calcium phosphate, and, more particularly, to dentifrice compositions containing a particulate, fluoro-substituted diphosphonate compound as a dental abrasive. Particulate calcium phosphate compounds have been known to be effective anticaries agents in that they act directly on the teeth and at the same time provide calcium to build the mineralized tissues. The anticaries activity of such compounds can be improved when combined with a water soluble fluoride compound. The combination of a particulate calcium phosphate and a fluoride compound with a surfactant in a dentifrice base has been known for many years. It has also been known to form granules of a calcium phosphate compound and a fluoride compound by wet granulation with polyvinylpyrrolidone as a binder. Although various particulate materials, particularly those containing fluorapatite, have been suggested as being useful anticaries agents and have been shown to be effective in vitro when incorporated into dentifrices, they have not proved to be completely satisfactory for some uses.
