Q: How to write in a partition that is not on the default ext4 setup? I'm trying to install some other partitions on my USB, but after I create them and see them with gparted I find that they're already mounted at /media/user/SMART_HD/ I checked mount options, and I tried unmounting with `umount -f /media/user/SMART_HD` but nothing happened, no error in the logs and no success. How can I unmount it without destroying the data? I'm looking for something that works without any human intervention, I suppose. Thanks in advance for any help you can provide. A: You can just open nautilus, browse to the mounted partition (you can find it with `df -k`) and press `Ctrl+H` to hide the directory, then unmount the partition. After unmounting you might have to reboot for the changes to take effect, but it should work fine without any intervention. Also, if you want to take a more hands-on approach to this problem, you can run the gparted installer from the live USB/CD and partition off the partition that you want to store data in, instead of relying on gparted to guess what you want. Alternatively, you could use mkfs on the partition that you want to store your data in, and let gparted create a filesystem for you in that partition, instead of manually mounting it first. You would do something like mkfs.ext4 /dev/sda1. Again, this is assuming that you want to store all the data there, not just a few files on the partition. If you want to store only a few files on that partition, and you don't want to bother with the mkfs.ext4 syntax, you can create the partition before mounting it, and pass the -m 04aeff104c
